TREE WANTED THANKS.

ONE day Madam Pig and her children were sitting under a big tree by the roadside when the tree, which was very full of fruit, bent its branches and spoke.

"The tree you thank me for," said the tree, "I have not received the credit you deserve. I have not received the credit you deserve."

and then you ask me to keep quiet. You are a rude creature."

"Why should I thank you for what you have done?" said Madam Pig. "If you kept all those apples on the tree, which we have eaten with those you have now your limbs would break. If we had been hungry and you had given us food from your branches, which you wished to keep, then I should thank you, but not for this which you threw on the ground."

"How dare you speak to me like that?" said the tree, shaking with anger and sending down some unripe, hard apples, which sent the pig and Madam Pig squealing down the road.

Mr. Blackbird, who had been nearby and heard all that had been said, flew into the tree and began to peck at an apple.

"How dare you spoil my unripe fruit," said the tree, "when there are plenty of ripe apples on the ground?"

"I did not dare to risk one of your unripe apples striking me," replied Mr. Blackbird. "I saw the way you treated Madam Pig, and besides I rather enjoy spoiling fruit."

"Oh, you dreadful creature!" exclaimed the tree, so angry now that it shook all the unripe apples from its branches, which fell on the ground, spoiled and worthless.

"There, you see what has happened," said Mr. Blackbird, hopping and chattering with glee. "You have lost all your fruit, and just because you wanted to be thanked for something you had thrown away."

"If you had not been so unjust to Madam Pig, perhaps I should have eaten the apples on the ground and you would not have been in such a fit of anger," and away he flew, leaving the tree to think over what he had said.

Highway to connect Alaska and Yukon

Associated Press

Dawson, Y. T., Aug. 18.—Plans for highway work in this section of the sub-Arctic call for the joining of Alaska and the Yukon territory by a road, for the first time, and eventually for a system of roads which will lead from Valdez, on the southwestern coast of Alaska, overland to Dawson.

A returned vacationist always expresses one as being regretful that he got back safe and sound.

AUTOMOBILES BROADEN FARM LIFE.

That the automobile has been a potent factor in relieving the farmer of the isolation which was such a drawback to rural life in former years has long been recognized. But its broadening influence is now showing itself in a new way. Farmers are being persuaded through their possession of motor cars to take long trips and see what is being done in other parts of the country. More
